Reducing the Risk of Damage, Loss and Claims

I would assume that this foreign forwarder is the equivalent of an NVOCC, although you do not indicate whether an ocean or multimodal bill of lading is being issued when the forwarder receives the goods from the vendor. .

Responsibility of buyer and seller in the case of cargo damage

However, the general rule, as supported by a number of court decisions, is that if the shipper has dealt only with the broker, and has paid the broker, the carrier cannot come back to the shipper to collect its freight charges.

Freight Insurance vs Freight Liability: Do you know the Difference?

Further investigation showed that the driver is allowed on the dock to count and inspect, and it is easy to see the product on the shrink-wrapped pallet to count.

Freight claim

Therefore, a freight forwarder needs to be diligent about which insurer to choose and what type of cover to take to ensure business continuity. Shippers must file their claims within 9 months of the delivery or the date upon which delivery should have been made. Answer: On partially damaged shipments, as a general rule the consignee should not reject the shipment, but should receive it and attempt to mitigate the damage.
