Devolution and health in the UK: policy and its lessons since 1998

Devolution to the local authorities is about putting local government at the forefront of State delivery and giving it the necessary powers and resources to do so. The implementation of decentralisation policies within the health sector has adopted a wide range of modes and forms, determined by the nature and structure of the sub-national level entity to which responsibility is transferred.

SHS Powerpoint: Decentralization and local governance (politics)

The primacy of the House of Commons is contained in powers that are not necessarily undermined by creating an elected second chamber. Lyons argued for reforms to the local tax base to provide greater fiscal autonomy to local government and to increase incentives for local government to promote economic growth.

Fixing the Plumbing: Resetting the Framework of Local Government Funding

The Westminster two-party politics of opposition is propped up by a majoritarian and disproportional voting system designed to artificially force politics into this two-party shape. The difficulty of achieving full coverage of international social science literature and the bibliometric consequences. In reality, it was about those with power and control over resources wanting to maintain the status quo, whereas those who lacked power and resources sought to have more power and influence and a greater share of resources.

EVOLUTION OF DEVOLUTION

Background Practices of power lie at the heart of policy processes. In order to facilitate the continued experimentation and evolution of where decision-making lies between central and local government for a given place, the financial settlement should allow funding to respond to, rather than determine, devolution. The overall consequence of these trends has been that the proportion of local government revenue spent on centrally prescribed services has increased, and this has come at the cost of local discretionary spending.
