Pig Tails 'n Breadfruit by Austin Clarke

My, how similar we are, yet different. He reveals his method for choosing a 'nice piece o' pigtail from the brine barrel', demonstrates how to test an okra for freshness, outlines the essential characteristics of a real pork chop, and instructs us in the proper use of a cou-cou stick, that essential tool found in every Barbadian home. His descriptions, and the West Indian dialect he wrote in, made me feel like I knew Barbados much better than any travel book or history book would have done. Here he eschews a traditional chronological order of events and takes the reader on a lyrical tour of his extraordinary life, interspersed with thought-provoking meditations on politics and race. Once Clarke moved to Canada to further his education as a college student, and later to teach in various universities in the United States, he grew homesick and longed for these meals as well the Caribbean sun. E at an extra plate for me! I want to posit that the culinary can serve as useful epistemological tool for apprehending aspects of contemporary Caribbean literary imagination and for mapping out a zone of critical dialogue and encounter with letters at large.
