The Trauma Bond and Healing from Narcissistic Abuse

Type I Trauma responses relate to a single terrifying event, often shocking or catastrophic, and usually totally unanticipated. I also learned about CBT and EMDR can you elaborate more about those and how those differ from Prolonged exposure therapy.

21 Common Reactions to Trauma

When the memory resurfaces we may experience shame, guilt, and anger associated with the event itself or, more commonly, as a residual effect. But now it is 2019, and hopefully we can start having individual thought again. Exploring the relationship through coaching or therapy to see the , , criticism, control, and the addictive aspects of the relationship is hard work, but it also provides the opportunity for the codependent to recognize, acknowledge, and affirm his or her own positive choices to get away and avoid being held as an emotional prisoner in the relationship.

The 4 Types of Trauma Responses

Please reread the above posts. If you have had unhealthy fight responses in the past, take a moment to be compassionate with yourself.

The trauma trap: what's causing inequalities in emergency care?

When the threat seems impossible to defeat in a fight, many people default to leaving the situation entirely. Criticizing Yourself for Reactions to the Trauma.
