The adjustable tilt also has the advantage that the resonance frequency of the etalon coincides with the line center and thus optimizing the output power. The distribution of the recorded grating is more like a rectangular function. If you do, and there is a mishap, nobody will be able to get in to help you.

It gets interesting when only the two second orders are imaged. For large values of  $n_1$  and  $\alpha_1$  this is not valid.

This reverses direction 100 times a second, so that a full cycle occurs 50 times a second 60 in the USA. Above this value the diffraction efficiency also increases outside the Bragg angle. They are usually profiled to an aspheric surface to correct for spherical aberration, a fault that causes lenses with spherical surfaces to have focal lengths that vary from the center to the periphery.
