Benjamin Disraeli

In some cases such as Cornwall in 1790, Dorset in 1806 and 1807 the contest was acknowledged not to be directed against one of the sitting Members, in the latter case William Morton Pitt, and the majority of freeholders promised one vote to him and the other to their favourite of the two contesting candidates. In 1807 Dawkins and Maitland combined against another third man, Blake, who tied for second place with Dawkins, the latter obtaining the seat on petition. This brought Australian commanders into conflict with Westmoreland's conventional attrition warfare approach, since Australian ground forces were required to follow US doctrine.
