Memoirs of Sir Walter Scott: 1806

Friend Mackay,—My lawful occasions having brought me from my residence at Gandercleuch to this great city, it was my lot to fall into company with certain friends, who impetrate from me a consent to behold the stage-play, which hath been framed forth of an history entitled Rob seu potius Robert Roy; which history, although it existeth not in mine erudite work, entitled Tales of my Landlord, hath nathless a near relation in style and structure to those pleasant narrations.

Walter Scott

Diary on Board the Lighthouse Yacht continued. I am always, my dear Lord, most truly yours, Walter Scott. I have desired him to call upon you, should he get to Dublin on leave, or come there upon duty.

Walter Scott

His friend's spirits were sinking, and he exerted himself in this way, in the hope of amusing the hours of languor at Bowhill. Everybody likes the Regalia, and I have heard of no one grudging their hog—but you must get something better.
