One might speculate that the shock of total defeat and the humiliation of being occupied by foreign troops—especially since no foreign soldiers had ever before landed on Japanese soil—created a willingness to try things that had never been tried before. Similarly, the Japanese schools of painting—the Kano school, for instance, which dominated Japanese official art for 300 years until 1867—taught that even the greatest master spends several hours a day copying. The shocked an economy that had become dependent on imported petroleum.

Japanese Business Structures

To many business people and public officials in the West, the postwar success of the Japanese economy is both an impressive and a puzzling achievement. As a latecomer to , Japan was able to avoid some of the trial and error earlier needed by other nations to develop industrial processes. As the costs of construction through the mountainous interior of Japan became apparent, in 1886 the construction of what became the was approved, approximately paralleling the southern coastline and Tokaido road as far as Nagoya.
