Her voice was one of the first courageous ones to be raised against the exploitative destruction of Amazonia and she spoke for its conservation until her death. These accounts of Margaret Mee's journeys in the Amazon jungle in the 1970's-80's taken from her diaries make you think of intrepid Victorian explorers. Perhaps accurate for the deep rainforest light, perhaps the original greens have faded slightly, perhaps different environmental conditions systematically affect greens? It's filled with photographs of the people she met, traveled with and the environs.

Age 47 she started to explore the Amazon where she studied and painted the plants and flowers of the Amazon rainforest for the next 30 years. She traveled on rickety planes, canoes, came down with a long lasting malaria. The author 1909-88 traveled to the Amazon area 15 times over a 32 year period, by canoe, on foot and often alone.
