A Laodicean : A Story of To

In the story Paula Power has inherited a medieval castle, Castle Stancy, from her industrialist father, the great railway contractor, John Power. A Laodicean is a bit of a departure for Hardy, in that he deals with a contemporary time period, rather than a previous, although the subject matter remains true to one of his themes, that of people attempting to shrug off the yoke of religious and social convention.

A Laodicean: A Story Of To

He was so absorbed in his pursuit that he did not mark the brilliant chromatic effect of which he composed the central feature, till it was brought home to his intelligence by the warmth of the moulded stonework under his touch when measuring; which led him at length to turn his head and gaze on its cause.

Laodicean, A (unabridged)

However hardy's use hear relates more to one who is unable to make their mind up; torn between two possibilities.

Indigo

The casino of Monte Carlo and the white cliffs of Etretat in Normandy are just two of the memorable venues on the itinerary as characters move around Europe, often in pursuit of each other following a sudden revelation being revealed.
