Secondary care As modern scientific medicine developed through the 1950s and 1960s health care became oriented towards the search for cures to disease rather than the prevention of illness.

Reforming Australia's health system, again

No health care system is perfect. At Brisbane Hospital in 1887, violence accounted for 11% of cases, followed by rheumatism 5%, VD 4% and tuberculosis 4%, with non-communicable diseases less common — diseases of the heart and blood vessels accounted for only 2% and cancer even less. Professional, practice and political issues in the history of New Zealand's remote rural 'backblocks' nursing: The case of Mokau, 1910-1940.

Aged care reforms and reviews

The report details areas of agreement and disagreement from the Advisory Group on the requirements to be met by providers in order to access the additional funding under the Addressing-workforce-pressure initiative. Although CMS surgeons had rights of private practice, William Bland 1789—1868, a Sydney emancipist doctor, became the first full-time private practitioner in 1815.
