[The injured of the summer of 1914 and their stories]

Wilhelm immediately accepted the proposal by telegrams at the ambassadorial and royal levels.

summer of 1914

We have here a grainy photograph of them in action late in 1914. Our position is the more difficult because Serbia seems to have given way very extensively. July 31, 1914 - Reacting to the Austrian attack on Serbia, Russia begins full mobilization of its troops.

The Endless Summer of 1914

The actual implementation of Plan XVII in five phases begun on 7 August, now known as the , resulted in French defeat. On 2 July, the Ambassador in Berlin wrote back to his king that the German Army wanted Austria to attack Serbia as quickly as possible because the time was right for a general war since Germany was more prepared for war than either Russia or France.

The Endless Summer of 1914

A Serbian defeat would also be a defeat for Russia and reduce her influence in the Balkans. August 7-24, 1914 - The French desire to score a quick victory ignites the first major French-German action of the war. Russia urges German restraint, but the Russians begin partial troop mobilization as a precaution.
