Parenting

Collectively, interventions also are more likely to achieve a significant level of impact if they incorporate some of the elements of prior interventions.

Parenting

Her first task is to determine the cause of this affliction, and she does so by means of an oracle. Thus the people of Nyansongo are not predominantly an agricultural people, but animal husbandry and outside employment serve important supplementary roles in their economy.

Cultural Anthropology

The risk of growing up poor continues to be particularly high for children in female-headed households; in 2013, approximately 55 percent of children under age 6 in such households lived at or below the poverty threshold, compared with 10 percent of children in married couple families DeNavas-Walt and Proctor, 2014. The size and composition of play groups and the attitudes of parents on friendliness are described for each age grade. The Agriculture Department estimated an average of 7 acres per homestead in Gusiiland in 1956.

For example, given a situation, there are many female diviners throughout Gusiiland. The powers of the homestead head vis-a-vis his wives and sons were great and have been described previously.

Cultural Anthropology

Those homesteads in Nyan- songo in which open conflict broke out most often between brothers were those in which the homestead head was senile or simply lacking Nyatisoigo; A Gusii Community in Kenya in forcefulness when dealing with his adult sons. If in-laws or other respected visitors are present, there is little quarreling. In response to the study charge Box 1-2 in Chapter 1 , this chapter presents the evidence on core parenting knowledge, attitudes, and practices separately.

The comparison of weaning from the breast and from complete dependence on caretakers should make it possible to evaluate the severity of the transition. When it has been completed, the bride holds onto the house post and must be dragged outside by the young men. Parents help children develop these social skills through parenting practices that include fostering and modeling positive relationships and providing enriching and stimulating experiences and opportunities for children to exercise these skills Landy and Osofsky, 2009.
