The book begins with Theron Campion, the posthumous son of Alec, the Mad Duke Tremontaine, being dumped by Ysaud, a gifted artist who's finished using him as a model for a series of paintings featuring scenes from the legendary past, a man murdering his king-lover, a man staring at his stag reflection in a pool of water, a band of nude young men dancing around a fire, and so on. Twelve laureates were awarded a Nobel Prize in 2020, for achievements that have conferred the greatest benefit to humankind. A picture book, titled My Brother's Book, was published in February 2013.

The Fall of the Kings (Riverside, #3) by Ellen Kushner

The first two books don't really fit neatly into my idea of fantasy. This book takes a pleasant road but a slow one towards its destination, and when you finally reach the book's pivotal moment it's so rushed that it's robbed of all its power.

Ellen Kushner (Author of Swordspoint)

The book's depictions of fanged monsters concerned some parents when it was first published, as his characters were somewhat in appearance. In 1904, Qing official Feng Quan sought to curtail the influence of the Gelugpa Sect and ordered the protection of Western missionaries and their churches. Where the Wild Things Are: Original Drawings by Maurice Sendak at in New York.

Main article: Judicial mutilation — principally the gouging out of eyes, and the cutting off of hands or feet — was formalized under the Sakya school as part of the 13th century Tibetan legal code, and was used as a legal punishment until being declared illegal in 1913 by a proclamation of the 13th Dalai Lama. This time there's a co-author: Ellen Kushner's wife, Delia Sherman.
