However, it is possible that neither the Socialists nor the parties on the right will be able to form a government, meaning a repeat of the election next year.

'No food, water, masks or gloves': migrant farm workers in Spain at crisis point

According to the deal, migrants lose the opportunity to work in Spain if they leave their Spanish workplace for any reason. Related: Bermejo had to cover his face with his T-shirt as topsoil dust kicked up like a mini sandstorm.

Painful memories of civil war purge live on in southern Spain

Polls show them well ahead of their three main adversaries: the leftist Adelante Andalucía coalition, and the PP and Ciudadanos on the right. The regions of Huelva and Almería, where migrants are now struggling under lockdown, are key parts of this cross-Europe supply chain.

'No food, water, masks or gloves': migrant farm workers in Spain at crisis point

The Guardian has repeatedly in the fruit and vegetable picking regions of southern Spain that supply berries and salad to supermarkets across Europe. Bermejo and Bautista crouched every few feet to inspect the 3-inch tall plants. Many have lived there for years and can afford to pay rent, but said no one will accept them as tenants.

Southern Spain's green

The only other worker she knows who did so was frequently seen crying in the greenhouses and eventually moved to another part of the farm, Jadida claims.
