Korean Confucianism

With Neo-Confucianism taken out of the school curricula and removed from its prominence in the daily life of Koreans, the sense that something essential to Korean history is missing led to a rebirth of Confucianism in South Korea in the late 1990s. March 2014 By the time of the Dynasty 918—1392 the position, influence, and status of Buddhism far exceeded its role as a mere religious faith. As Korean feminist organizations gained more influence the government listened, and in 2000 established the Department of Gender Equality to allow women to participate in making policy.
