He quotes a sample letter from a young man in the army that misses his father and requests that his father send his picture. Throughout the entire Park Chung Hee era, the dissident writer par excellence was Kim Chi-ha, whose satirical pen landed him in prison, and even on death row for a time, and turned him into an international icon of anti-authoritarian resistance. The prototype of the ideal home taken from the American idiom was resignified, however, into its very opposite in the process of vernacularization.
