Code of Practice (Safety and health at work)

Controlled assessment and coursework tasks are untiered.

Code of Practice (Safety and health at work)

GCSE examinations in English and mathematics were reformed with the 2015 syllabus publications, with these first examinations taking places in 2017. This can be seen as, in general, more appeals being submitted each year, however the appeals rarely result in any grade changes as only 182 out of 6.

Special Education Needs Provision within Mainstream Education

The youngest person known to have achieved a grade 9 is Ellie Barnes who achieved the grade in Mathematics aged 8 years old. With criterion-referenced grades, in theory, all candidates who achieve the criteria can achieve the grade.

Policy papers and consultations

Collecting and recording this information about children with SEN aims to provide sound comparative information to inform special educational planning and policy development, to identify funding needs, and to monitor trends and provide answers to queries about data. The examination results are released to centres schools prior to the release to candidates and the public. Formerly, many subjects were tiered, but with the mid-2010s reform, the number of tiered subjects reduced dramatically, including the removal of tiering from the GCSE English specifications.

Policy papers and consultations

The code promotes an integrated approach, taking account of the fact that synthetic vitreous fibre insulation wools do not appear in the workplace in their pure forms but rather as a product with mixed components. Many of those who achieve below this standard will later retake GCSE English and mathematics to improve their grade.

General Certificate of Secondary Education

The examination boards complied by modifying the syllabi of the remaining GCSE qualifications to remove modular components. View information on to the code. The Labour Party has argued that it is grossly unfair that private school pupils get an easier path into universities as a consequence.
