If at the early hour of dawn You lovingly remember Him, You will avert the sudden death, Death, and all the Karmas too! How long soever a devotee A poor Brahmin may have been, Does not give up regard for the holy thread; How long soever a devotee A florist may have been, He'll still desire to worship The Brahma near the well; How long soever a devotee A trader may have been, He'll not give up regard For the lump of clay by a heap How long soever a devotee A coppersmith may have been, He'll not give up regard For the goddess káliká I have no regard for any But Thy ÿaraõas, O Kíðala Saþgama Lord! When shall I have My gaze become as breath; When shall I have My love become as breath; Leaving the company Of the passions of my flesh, And saying, Kíðala Saþgama Lord, O Liþga, Liþga, Liþga, Liþga?.
