When had a mother such a lust for rule That she could even yield herself to this? Then, sir, discharge me not from your employ Without some written commendation, That I can tire the hair or pare the nails, That those who were my friends may take me in! Be not the mouthpiece of these men: Domitius! It hath put off: she hath gone: she sitteth happy. I want no spirit kingdom after death. To-morrow when you first shall sit in judgment, And set your name unto the scroll of death——NERO.

Nero by Stephen Phillips, Paperback

His limbs quiver a moment and then are still. You are Locusta, and your trade is poison. That slipped from me—Is't treason? NERO walks to and fro, constructing the scene in pantomime to himself.
